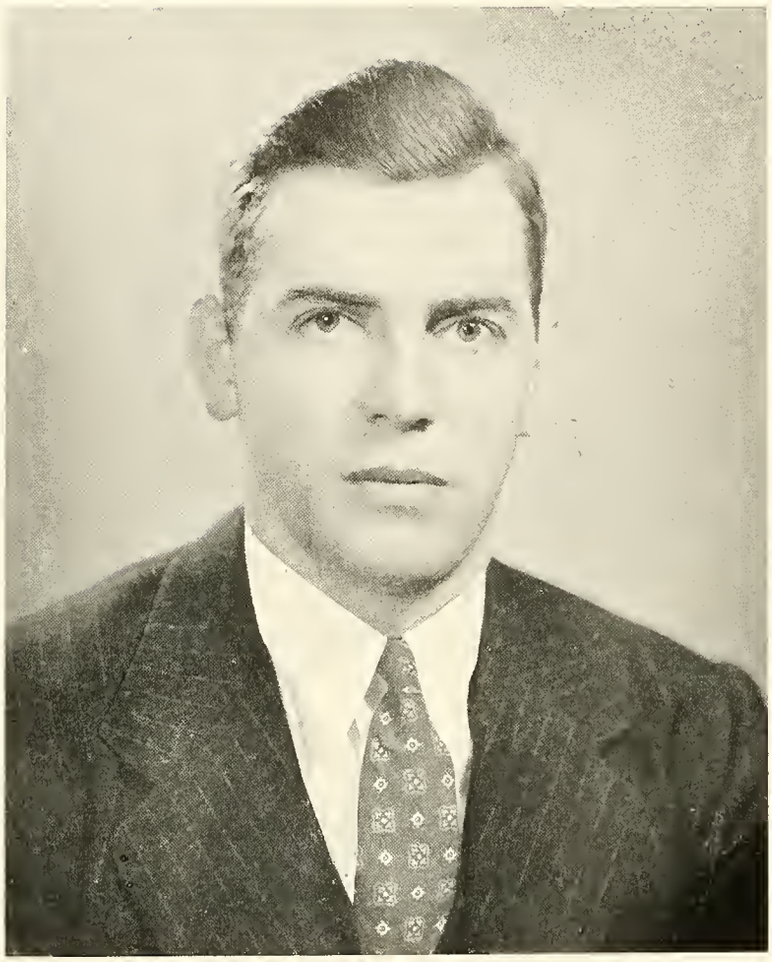
Dedication



TO

KENNETH V. RANDOLPH, D.D.S.

Not to KENNETH RANDOLPH the teacher, though his classes might well serve as models of exactitude and educational stimuli . . .

Not to KENNETH RANDOLPH whose meticulous guidance on the clinic floor has caused even the poorest technician to turn out a masterpiece . . .

Rather to KENNETH RANDOLPH the man, because his character and sincerity somehow work their way to the hearts of his students, because his open-mindedness and fairness exemplify the spirit of our School. It is with admiration and respect that we dedicate this volume to DR. RANDOLPH.

The Oral Revival of Joe Adams

(From Henry Hough's entertaining and enlightening Country Editor, published by Doubleday, Doran & Co., in 1940).

We have a rule in the Gazette office against all stories concerning false teeth, chewing tobacco, and boys going with girls (or vice versa). There are plenty of other things which are really funny, and city people do not have a monopoly of good taste. Most of our readers like to be protected from the old livery stable school of pleasantry. But I do wish to tell here an experience Joe Adams had with his false teeth, for the sake of the light it may reflect upon the life and character of Joe and Harry.

Every winter night before they went to bed one of them had to let off the water in the pump to prevent a freeze-up. After this operation on a cold evening Harry came into the sitting room and inquired, "Was there anything in that glass of water under the pump handle?"

"Just my false teeth," said Joe. "Why?"

"I thought I heard something clink," said Harry.

"What did you do with it?" asked Joe.

"I hove it out on the lawn," said Harry.

"You shouldn't have done that to my teeth," said Joe.

"You never should have left them under the pump handle," said Harry.

"I know that very well," Joe said, "but just the same you shouldn't have hove them out on the lawn."

Together the brothers took the kerosene lamp and stepped out into the yard, but for all the friendly mellowness of the old lamp it did not give light enough to assist their ageing eyes. They groped and peered, but were afraid to tread about too much for fear of stepping on what they sought.

"It's no use," said Joe, at last, "I guess we'll have to let it go until morning."

"I guess we will," said Harry.

They went into the house and continued the customary process of bedding down for the night.

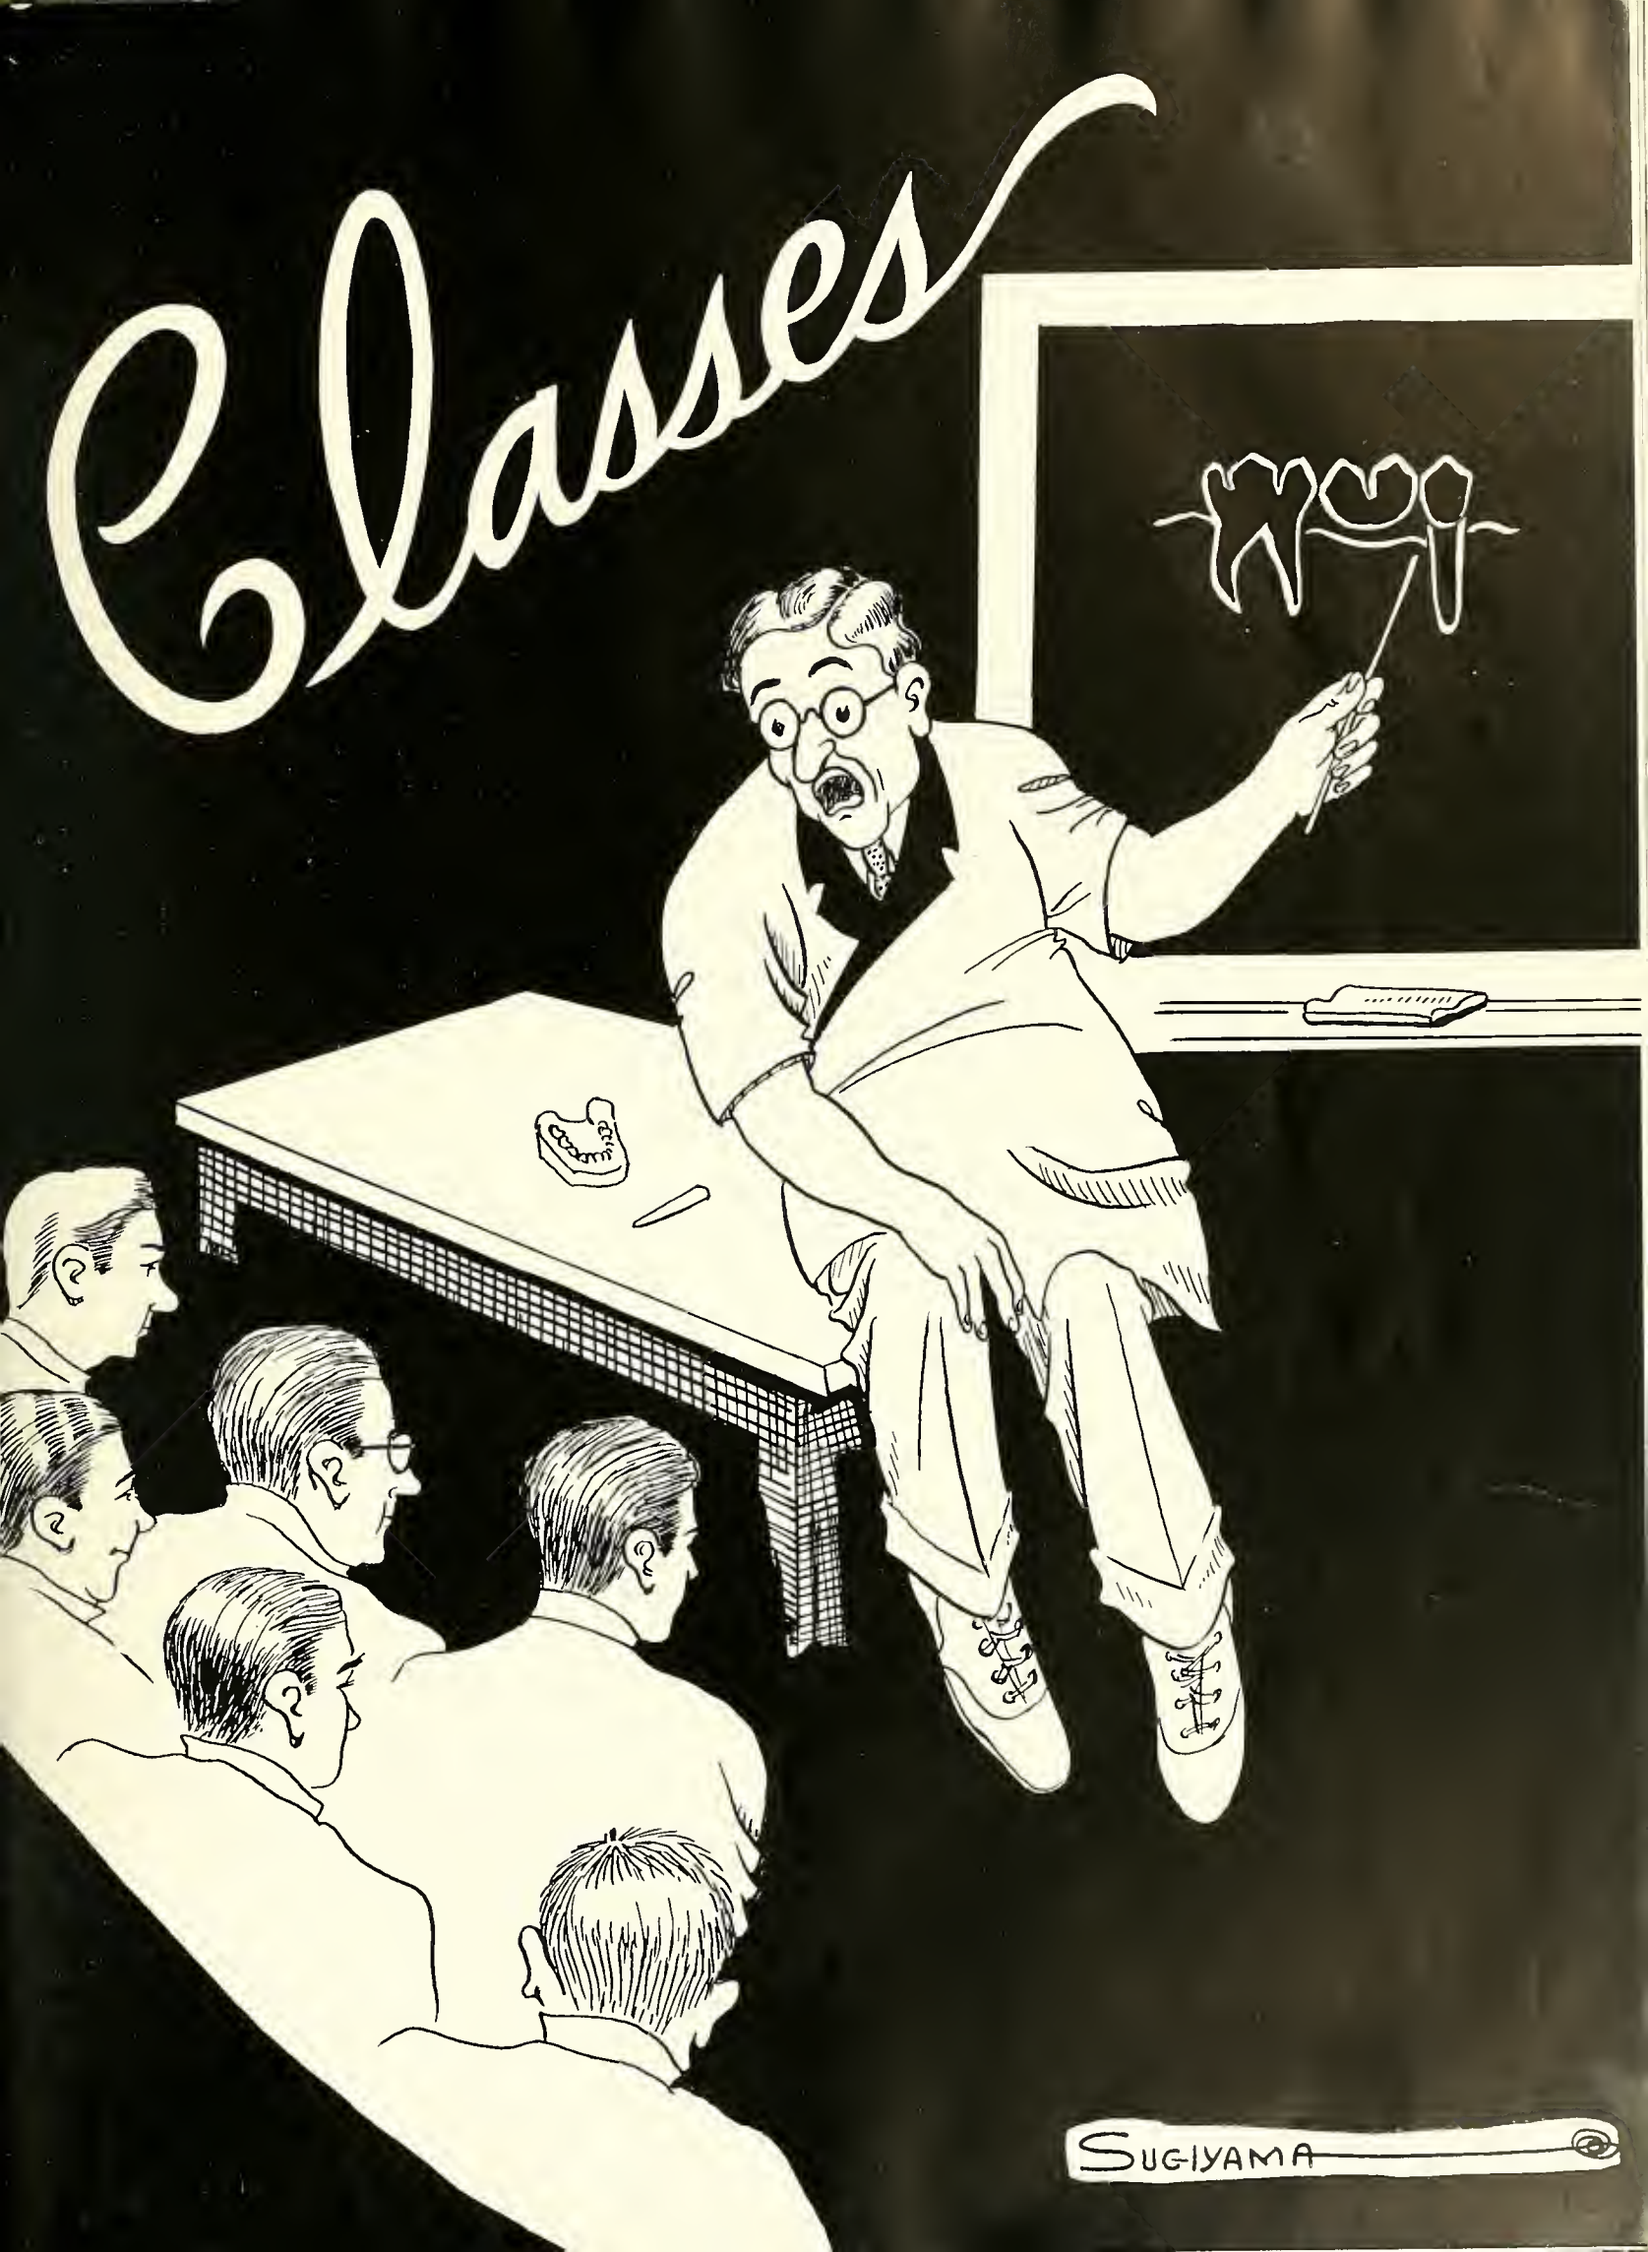
"Thank you very much for the good care you took of my teeth," said Joe.

I don't know what Harry said, or whether he said anything at all. At six o'clock in the morning, which is to say as soon as it was light, Joe got out of bed and made his way to the back veranda. The scene which he surveyed was disconcerting. Snow had begun in the night and was still falling. It had drifted in long barrows, it had heaped high up about the slatted fence, it had covered all the ground with a deep, soft residue of fleecy cold. Joe poked around a little but without much hope. The false teeth, for the time being at least, might as well have been at the bottom of the sea.

"Well," he said to Harry, "I guess I'll have to gum it for the rest of the winter."

Ordinarily the snow does not remain long on the ground on our island. We expect to have one or two good snowstorms in the course of a winter and would be disappointed if they did not come, but most of the time the landscape is bare and often there is hardly any frost in the ground. But this winter happened to be an unusually severe one, and the snow hung on and hung on. The brothers got along as amicably as usual—and in all the years of their common housekeeping there had hardly been an unpleasant word between them—but it is safe to say that once or twice during the long weeks (and perhaps oftener) Joe repeated his mild rebuke, "Thank you for the good care you took of my teeth."

Ultimately the thaw came, the snow melted, and the teeth appeared, earlier than the crocuses and in this particular yard a great deal more welcome. Joe had them cleaned and repaired in the city, and after that they were as good as new.



Classes
SUGIYAMA

The Seniors...

The Class of 1945 is destined to go down in the annals of the B.C.D.S. as a unique aggregation of students whose life at Lombard and Greene varied immensely from the normal. In an ever-changing world, such as we are witnessing at the present, our class was subjected to the many unexpected and unavoidable alterations of routine school life that are commensurate with a fluctuating period. In retrospect, we are satisfied that this chapter of our lives has been closed. We are confident that it will prove to have been a worthwhile endeavor.

Our class has the distinction of being the first to enter the School under the accelerated program. The weather man greeted us with an inauspiciously hot day on June 15, 1942, and did not exactly encourage us to study Gray's Anatomy for the remainder of that summer. Also during the freshman year, because of the war and other unforeseen conditions, the class was unintentionally converted into a guinea pig, as it were, for the School's experimentation with its teaching staff. By the time we became sophomores, difficulties resulting from faculty changes and shortages were fairly well straightened out.

Honorary Class President
JOSEPH C. BIDDIX, JR., D.D.S.

The Class of '45, unlike any other class that preceded it, had the opportunity to join the Army and yet be separated from it while still in School. Few of us will ever forget the days we spent at Fort Meade during our induction period and during the time of our discharge. In particular, the ones who won the seventy-dollar dice games will relish the thought.

With the advent of our donning clinic gowns, many of us felt the breath of professional life and with it the wisdom Dr. Ide's wise counsel that professional men should be family men. As a consequence, a goodly bunch of the boys have become benedicts.

As the final curtain began to close on our days at the B.C.D.S., our minds were laden with the thought of the immensity of the requirements of the senior year. They constituted an horrendous obstacle that had to be hurdled by all of us.

We now look forward with firm conviction and stout determination to taking our places side by side with our fellow men in the Armed Forces of our nation, to help effect a quick end to the war and the attainment of a just and lasting peace.

The Juniors . . .

Fifty-nine battered, air-sick, goldfoil-conscious men entered upon a new stage in their dental careers. Financial worries plagued most of us; since the Army no longer doled out the cash. We, however, maintained our pride, insisting that we would rather starve than work for a living. The change from Army to civilian life called for many adjustments. It was Pop who paid again. No longer could we attract the women with our dashing uniforms; it was a limp and tall story for us now. Flashy ties, saddle shoes and sport jackets were again in vogue.

"A banan" became the password for the year, and such phrases as "Same scene, 3 days later" and "I lost my head" were popular. Damian (I mean Damiani) still amazes us with the number of young female patients he is able to amass. "How does he do it?," was the question. This, however, was not the only question we asked, for there were thousands to be answered as far as our studies were concerned. Our past two years had prepared us for this situation. We applied our knowledge, but were a bit shaky, questioning each move we took. We realized, humbly, how little we knew, how much there was to know. Points and requirements plagued us and made "eager beavers" out of what would normally be a rather lazy group of students.

We were given an opportunity to get a glimpse of the various specialties of dentistry. Many of us observed for the first time the many interesting fields of dentistry we might choose after graduation.

Sharpen that line angle! Exposure! See Dr. Edwards! Root canals! Remember those 12-95-10-12's, and "fight it"! There were those of us who insisted that they saw pink when they had not yet penetrated enamel. Slobbering saliva, fatty tissue, yells of pain, shy inlays—let's tug and pull, men, for old Maryland!

The duet of Morelli, alias Black Mike, and Mackler, holds first place among our singing talent! Casper and J. P. Garvey are still our best entertainers, while Moes and Maxson are our most loving couple. Heck is still looking for Delorme. Will he ever find him! Krumbeck is still our class individualist. "Hand me a prescription blank, please."

Like the preceding Junior Classes, we have our problems; but, facing them with determination, we look forward to our Senior year with an eagerness to learn and with a desire to serve our profession and mankind to the best of our ability.

Sophomore Class History

Ah, the Sophomore year at last was here. That thought carried a wonderful connotation to all fellows tired of "pounding out" Anatomy, Histology, and Biochemistry. But no, that super-accelerated Bacteriology course, now for the first time given in the Sophomore year, kept the evening candles burning far into the night. Oral Pathology, normally given in the Sophomore year, is to be given in the first term of the Junior year. You mean we have to climb those five flights of stairs two times a week for another year?

With the beginning of classes on September 27, the Sophs appeared in their Sunday best "civvies," since the A.S.T.P. was terminated during our change in terms.

We also found that "gas" was an unreal state when Baldacchino and Mollis began to smile while walking around the school.

Our "Sophomore Hop," held at the Merchants' Club, proved to be one of the gayest affairs of the year. We "Tripped the light fantastic" to the music of our own Charlie Beck and his orchestra.

Of course we cannot forget Mr. Foley's class in which Jerry Heroux had difficulty in finding a bibliography for "Mr. Worm's Theory of Dental Decay." You will remember also Mr. Foley's greeting, "How's the boy from the STAR unit today?"

As we approach our ascension to the clinic floor, one fear is uppermost in our minds. According to our predecessors, the little brass screws of technic fame are very difficult to find in practical cases. Nevertheless, we all are anxiously awaiting our first appointment.

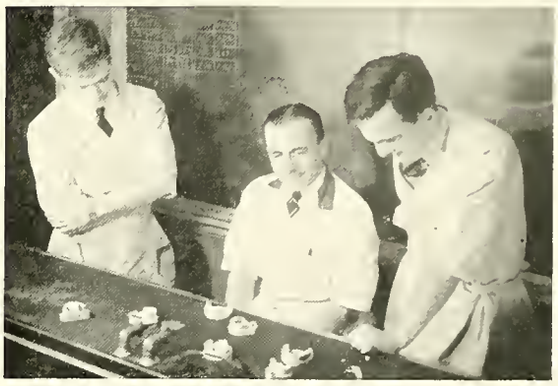
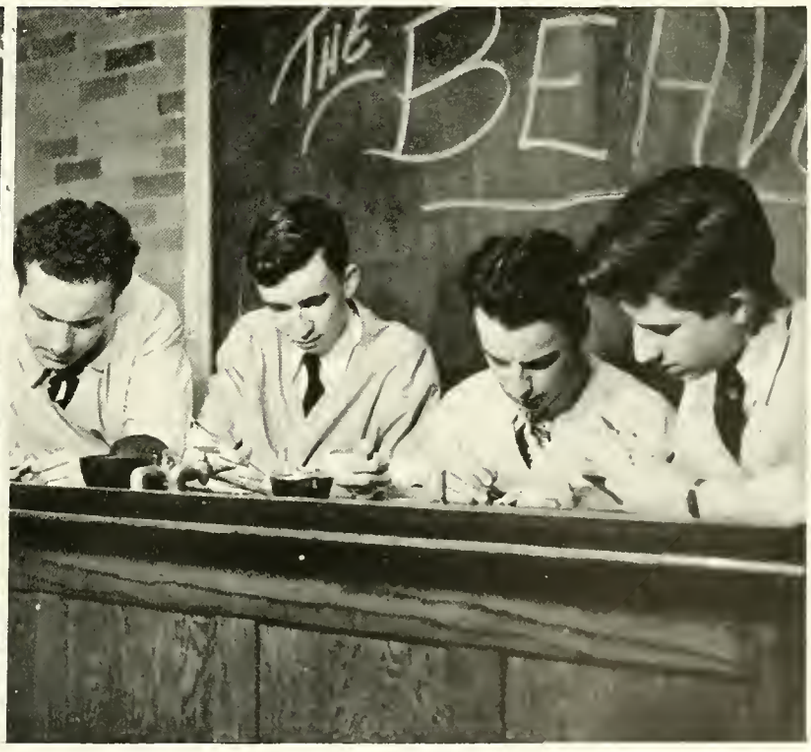
Sophomores





The Freshmen . . .

From the North and the South, from the East and the West, from small towns and large cities, from camps and battle areas, came our Freshman Class. For these boys the first year of Dental School was an eventful one as they advanced toward the second line of defense—the Sophomore year. Victoriously they emerged from the many skirmishes which led to their first big obstacle—mid-years.

After this successful advance, they moved forward to clear the way for their next objective—the Sophomore year. They made it. In review, they will ne'er forget the lab quizzes in Anatomy (only a few injured); the "everyone knows" of Biochemistry (many didn't know!); the commendation to the entire group of their fine showing on Histology Hill; the warning issued by Dr. Williamson regarding the acrylic models the boys had on hand; the neckline fractures in D.A.; the "Elmer" of the Anatomy lab—Lou Knight; Copen, the technician first class; the alternating rhythm of the School clock; the frat parties; the Dean's welcoming address; and the cry of the lonely freshman: "Don't fence me in."

The Gorgas Odontological Society, an organization dedicated to the memory of a great leader in American dentistry, enjoyed a year of vigorous activity despite the trials and tribulations imposed on the members by the exigencies of the war. The new members chosen from the Junior Class will surely carry on and help to perpetuate the scholastic and professional standards that are the guiding principle of the Society.

In this war year the social activities of Gorgas were confined to a single affair—a dinner-dance held at the Lord Baltimore Hotel on April 27. The highlights of the program were the initiation of new members and the presentation of traditional certificates to the graduating members.

The Oren H. Gaver Dental Seminar got off to a great start this year under the able leadership of Frank Gilley. Establishing new aims, the Society has been able to maintain a full and active program.

In order to insure itself of a more interested membership, the Society has this year required prospective members to submit a paper on some phase of Dentistry to the Membership Committee for consideration.

Two very interesting meetings were held in December—one featured a movie on "Regional Anesthesia;" the other was an open clinic on "Mandibular Fractures."

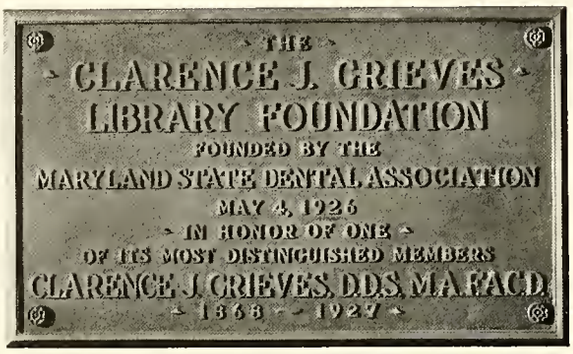
Organized February 23, 1944, the Interfraternity Council is the youngest student organization in the School. Designed and organized for the purpose of coordinating fraternity affairs, the Council controls under constitutional laws the rushing of new men and the fraternity affairs that involve all fraternities.

Under the sponsorship of the Council, athletic leagues in softball and other sports have been organized. Through a planned program, the Council has strengthened the fraternity social affairs. The extensive fraternity education program for Freshmen has aided the new men in gaining an appreciation of fraternity life at the School.

Although in its infancy, the Council is well founded on sound principles and purpose and holds great hope for the coordinating of fraternity affairs in the future years.

Each fraternity has three student representatives and one faculty member. Through this representation, each fraternity may adequately present any fraternity problem before the Council, and by means of a roundtable discussion with members of the other fraternities, problems can be solved.

The Library



In the development of the greatly improved curriculums and the generally strengthened facilities that have characterized the progress of dental education in the past two decades, the dental libraries have been receiving careful attention from those leaders in dental education who realize the splendid values to be derived by the students and by the faculties from the services afforded by a well-manned and well-equipped dental library.

Eighteen years ago the Dental School Library of the University of Maryland began operation as a unit separate from the parallel units of the other divisions of the University. A careful and efficient policy of purchasing, supported by the generous help of alumni and friends, has built up the library of this School to its present status as an outstanding dental library. Funds have been devoted to the maintenance of an up-to-date working collection as well as to the development of a large historical collection, with the result that the library possesses one of the largest collections of dental literature in the country.

Last year the use of the library totaled 14,439 volumes, as compared with 704 volumes in 1927-1928. The wealth of the Library's resources and its competent staff account for much of this remarkable increase in use. A very vital factor, however, has been the growing emphasis of the faculty upon collateral reading by the students to supplement the materials presented in their various course textbooks. The Library has been making and will continue to make an important contribution to the education of the students of our School.

Meet Dr. Black

The average dental student knows Green Vardiman Black only as the great dentist and scientist who founded the principles of Operative Dentistry; but he does not know of Dr. Black as a versatile genius, as a man of simple habits and colorful personality.

He will be interested to know:

. . . that Dr. Black was the great-grandson of William Black, a captain of the militia of North Carolina during the time of the Mecklenburg Rebellion, and one of the first officers who refused to take the oath of allegiance to the British Crown.

. . . that at the age of seventeen, G. V. Black acted as postmaster at Clayton, Illinois.

. . . that he began the study of dentistry at the age of twenty-one and entered practice one year later.

. . . that Dr. Black served as a sergeant during the Civil War.

. . . that his writings have been translated into many languages and are standard authorities on the subjects they discuss.

. . . that Dr. Black invented and patented the first cord-driven-transmission dental engine.

. . . that Dr. Black invented an Amalgam Micrometer, a Phago-dynamometer, a Gnatha-dynamometer, a Manu-dynamometer, and a Cysto-dynamometer.

. . . that Dr. Black owned the first microscope in Jacksonville, Illinois, where he began the practice of his profession.

. . . that Dr. Black was an extremist in detailed minutiae and even dissected and mounted the sexual organs of a fly.

. . . that Dr. Black wrote a manuscript on house mold and a complete thesis on the reproduction of fungi.

. . . that Dr. Black consumed a hundred and fifty black cigars each week to help him to concentrate on difficult scientific problems.

. . . that in 1878, Dr. Black was licensed to practice medicine by the first Illinois State Board of Health.

. . . that Dr. Black was an authority in the study of cyclones in Illinois and made extensive reports to the Weather Bureau at Washington.

. . . that Dr. Black always carried a pocket barometer.

. . . that Dr. Black owned a sailboat called "The Microbe."

. . . that Dr. Black never neglected to vote the Republican ticket and frequently contributed articles to newspapers on current political topics.

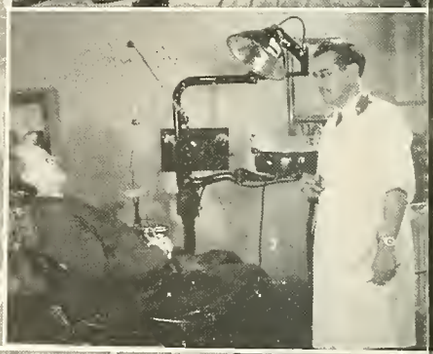
. . . that Dr. Black was a member of the Masonic Order.

. . . that Dr. Black was a crack rifle shot and expert fisherman.

. . . that Dr. Black excelled as a chess player.

. . . that Dr. Black was leader of the choir and played a violin in his church for many years.

This was Green Vardiman Black who devoted his life to the complexities of science, yet always enjoyed the delights of simple living.



Leach Cross, Prize Fighter and Dentist

Louis Charles Wallach was born of poor Hebrew parents in the heart of New York's ghetto, on February 18, 1886. His home was located in a typical tenement district of that section, noted for its overcrowded conditions and lack of recreational space for the children. He was a thin, weak lad, continually plagued by illness.

Unlike the majority of boys of his time, Leach realized that advanced educational training would be of great value to him, and he was determined to obtain it at any cost. In 1904, he enrolled at the City College of New York. After a few months, deciding to devote his entire training to the study of dentistry, he entered the New York College of Dentistry.

While a student at C.C.N.Y., Leach met a classmate who was to have a definite influence on the pattern of his life. This lad was Al Newman, son of Billy Newman, the promoter at the Longacre Athletic Club. Al brought Leach over to his father's arena often, and eventually Leach got a job of dispensing soft drinks at the Club, which helped him in obtaining funds for his education and, at the same time, brought him into contact with many of the topnotch performers.

Young Newman knew that Leach was a tough youngster, and thought that his classmate could more than hold his own with many of the lightweights then appearing in the Longacre ring. He nagged his father continually for an opportunity for 'Leachie' to display his wares, but the older Newman was reluctant to allow the frail-looking soda jerker to step into the ring.

Finally, the opportunity that the two lads had been waiting for arrived. Frankie Madden's opponent failed to put in an appearance. Billy Newman was "on the spot," and he was forced to send a determined but untried Leach Cross into the ring.

Madden was a ring veteran who had quite a reputation because of his long string of KO victories. Cross, however, was a game youngster and he entered the ring that night an excited and confident fighter. Near the close of a speedy and hard-hitting first round, Madden put Cross down and out with a hard right hand to the chin.

His second attempt in the squared circle found him opposite Jack Doyle, an Irishman with the reputation of a slugger. Doyle lived up to advance notices that evening by landing a KO punch in the second round. Cross suffered a broken nose in this bout, but the injury, together with the two KO defeats, failed to discourage him.

His third match was similar to the first two, except that it was not until the third canto that Jack Goodney was able to land the knockout blow. Cross decided that he was showing marked improvement, for he had lasted one round longer in each successive match. At the end of 1906, he had carved himself a half-dozen well-earned triumphs, including KO decisions over Bob Waters and Jack Winters.

Leach was not in peak physical condition for his matches in 1906 and early 1907. His desire for a dental degree superseded any pugilistic ambitions he had, and consequently his training program was cut to a minimum. His diligence and hard work were rewarded in June, 1907, when he received the degree of Doctor of Dental Surgery and was graduated with the highest honors of his class.

He opened his first dental office at 320 East Third Street soon after graduation, and it was not long before he had an extensive practice. He did not give up his boxing career, but, on the contrary, intensified his efforts to establish himself in the fistic limelight. He was beginning to come into his own, and was establishing himself as a definite threat in the lightweight circle. In the short space of two weeks, late in 1907, he registered ten straight victories.

Leading promoters throughout the country were now bidding for Cross' services. His speed, punching ability, and cleverness in the ring combined to make him an excellent drawing card. Under the watchful eye of Sam Wallach, his brother and manager, he obtained matches with some of the leading lightweights of that time. He met successfully in 1908 such outstanding contenders as Dick Hyland, Packy McFarland, Harlem Tommy Murphy and Battling Hurley.

The list of Cross' opponents from 1911 to 1915 reads like a Who's Who of the lightweight division. We can find among them such all-time greats as Battling Nelson, Willie Ritchie, Ad Wolgast and Freddie Welsh, all title-holders at one time or another; also Young Shugrue, Johnny Dundee, Jack Britton, Harlem Tommy Murphy, Joe Mandot, Bert Keyes, Packy McFarland, Bud Anderson, Charley White, Charley Griffin, and many other topnotchers.

The punishment involved in battling men of this calibre over a period of years was beginning now to take its toll on Cross. On February 21, 1916, at Cincinnati, Cross opposed Milburn Saylor, a promising young lightweight. It was apparent from the opening bell that Cross was in for a terrific lacing. Finally, in the sixth round, Cross' manager, Sam Wallach, was forced to toss in the towel to save his brother from further punishment. A few days later, Cross announced his retirement from the ring.

Cross practiced dentistry exclusively for a period of about five years after 1916, but early in 1921 he decided to return to the ring. His success was only mediocre. He managed to earn a few decisions, but after a half-dozen bouts he realized that he could not maintain the pace that the youngsters were setting. He decisioned Bert Spencer in a hard-fought eight rounder, and immediately afterward said farewell to active prize fighting for all time.

Cross abandoned his dental practice temporarily, and traveled to Hollywood, California, to make a venture in another field of business. He became the owner and manager of large apartment house which he named "The Cross Arms." He also owned two large and very successful restaurants in Hollywood.

Leach was destined to receive another severe blow, however, in the stock market crash of October, 1929. Overnight, Cross was left penniless. He left the West Coast early in 1930, and returned to New York and to the profession of dentistry. He has practiced continuously in New York City since 1930.

In spite of his many setbacks, Dr. Cross is a happy man today, content in the realization that he has served dentistry and boxing faithfully and conscientiously. He has contributed much to both fields, and there is a strong possibility that, within a few years, he may make an outstanding contribution to dentistry. He has designed an appliance for crown and bridge work which may prove far superior to any similar type now found on the market. it is quite probable that, as a dental designer, Leach Cross may be able to regain a portion of the prestige and renown that were once his.

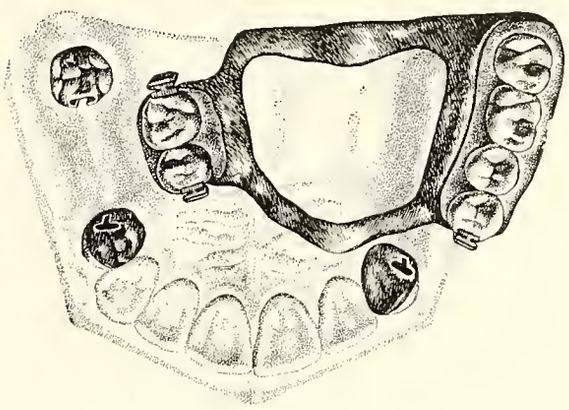
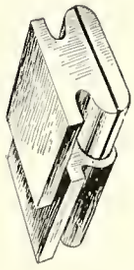
25 Years of Satisfactory Service

Where Better Practice Indicates the Use of Precision Attachments for Removable Restorations . .



The use of Precision Attachments is indicated in this case because they eliminate need of a cumbersome continuous clasp across anteriors from cuspid to 1st bicuspid, which would be required in a clasp case in addition to clasps on the cuspid, 1st bicuspid and 2nd molar.

Therefore, attachments are more comfortable to the patient and more esthetic, avoiding the display of gold inevitable in clasps on cuspid and 1st bicuspid.



Send for 12 Design Charts of Attachment Cases with Descriptive and Technical Literature.

Specify

BROWN PROXIMAL CONTACT ATTACHMENTS

BROWN PRECISION ATTACHMENTS have been used successfully since 1920, when patents were granted to their inventor, Dr. I. Brown. This event followed by only a few years the publicity and impetus that Dr. Herman Chayes gave to the advance in removable restorations by the introduction of the precision type of attachment.

So simple, yet so effective and practical are the design and mechanical principles employed in Brown Attachments, that they have defied every effort to improve upon them for 25 years. Except with the addition, about 10 years ago, of the proximal contact type, to give the convenience of a built-in proximal contact, no change in design has been made. The sizes of the Brown Attachment made today are identical with those made 25 years ago — a comforting thought if replacement parts are required.

[As makers of attachments, we are as anxious to discourage their use where contra-indicated as to encourage it where indicated.]

When the call to arms thundered across the vast Pacific from Pearl Harbor, all America responded, and Weber was among the first to effect a transition from peace-time to full-scale production for Uncle Sam.

Foresight in the completion of a rehabilitation program and the complete modernization of the Weber equipment line months before our country entered World War II, placed Weber in a position to supply modern, down-to-date, dental appliances to our government for urgent dental clinic use. Today, Weber manufactures one of the most complete lines of scientific equipment offered the dental profession . . . Motor Chairs, Foot-Pump Chairs, Shock-Proof X-Rays, Scientific Lights, Cuspidors, Units, Engines and Stools . . . all embodying the last word in electrical and mechanical ingenuity, appearance, and utility.

IF YOU ENTER THE ARMED SERVICE
you will find it a privilege and a pleasure to work with Weber Equipment which has been designed and built to meet rigid Government specifications.

IF YOU ENTER PRIVATE PRACTICE
you can probably qualify for new Weber Equipment (post-war design). Ask your Weber Dealer for particulars—or write us direct.

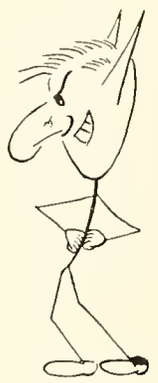
Motu Proprio



The last page of the MIRROR has always held a great significance for me because this page is the only page in the book devoted entirely to what the Editor wants to say. Unlike most books, which have an editor's page at the beginning, this yearbook habitually leaves the last page for this "editorial expression." Whether it should be used as an apology to the reader for having ploughed through these ninety-six pages or as an explanation of the book I am not sure.

Nevertheless, I made up my mind that since this page was to be a personal one, I would try to express a few thoughts conforming with the informality which I have set as a policy for this issue. Although bothered greatly this year with the complexities of war restrictions and shortages, we have managed to fill up a considerable number of pages. Unfortunately we could not have as many pictures as we wanted to have because of the shortage of flash bulbs. But, all in all, the staff did a very good job with making the best of what we had.

For the first time, the section divider pages are cartoons instead of photographs. The credit for the artwork on these pages goes to Sugiyama, who did an excellent piece of work.

For the photography, I would like to give credit to George LaMotte who gave up much of his valuable clinic time to take these pictures with his staff of photographers.

I would like to express my personal thanks to Mr. Foley who so patiently guided me through this book. Without him I fear that many of these pages would still be blank and that I would still be trying to figure out how to fill them.

Mr. Penny, our publisher, I would like to decorate with a medal for his thorough course in the education of a novice editor.

To all those who have aided in one way or another in the publication of this book, I thank each of you because without you this book could not have been made.

And last, to Bruce Mathias who worried over each of these ninety-six pages with me, I express my sincere gratitude. No editor could ask for a more cooperative and willing Associate Editor to work with.

Finally, you have read it all because this is the end—the Editor has gone home.
